

- Indigenous species and strategic water source areas secured through law and policy as the foundation of long-term ecological and economic resilience
- A legal and regulatory environment in which fossil fuel and extractive interests can no longer override community rights or constitutional environmental protections
- Slow down extraction to make space for more sustainable development alternatives
- A government that is transparent and accountable and serves the people equitably